PREFACE

Most importantly, the changing landscape of information acquisition, storage, use and reuse has a profound impact on copyright laws and intellectual properties. These changes can have a major impact on how libraries function and on the public service they provide and librarians are the first port of call for advice on copyright and IPR matters. As traditional skills and aspects of librarianship have changed, partly due to the complex development of scholarly communication, digital collections, and the demands of new services related to e-resources, publishing and copyright, librarians often do not feel confident in their knowledge about copyright and are, therefore, hesitant to take on this new role. Not only are librarians, as professionals, bound to uphold the values and ethics of our profession of which copyright is one, but it is our role to protect the copyright of those who allow us, as a public service, to lend their property to others. To do this, librarians and other information management professionals need to be copyright literate, in order to both carry out their own functions and duties, and to support colleagues and users in the most effective way possible. Hence, there is a need for basic knowledge and for staying up-to-date on new developments about copyright and it is crucial to continue to address the emerging challenges posed at the intersection of technology, society and law.

The book "IPR- Role of libraries & librarianship", presents an excellent collection of 18 articles on various facets of Library & Information Science and IPR used in libraries. The articles highlights LIS research with up to date data and subject coverage. The contributors are eminent library & information science professionals. The articles included in this volume maintain a high academic standard.

This book builds upon empirical research by the author and by others within the library & information science field to provide an overview of the developments and directions taken by libraries in providing services using social media, and the considerations that shape and influence decision making for libraries in adapting services to social space. While it is not the intention here to provide an exhaustive listing of all social media implementations by libraries, coverage here provides a view of the depth and scope of library services in social sites, and includes as well perspectives on both opportunities and challenges for libraries in their continuing expansion into social media in the future. We would like to thank to all their invaluable assistance, and my our family, friends, and colleagues for their unwavering support.

We also express our indebtedness to Current publication, Agra for their willingness to execute this work and publish it in a meticulous manner. No doubt this book will be an asset to library and information education and research at different levels. We are sure that the stakeholders will love reading this book and the book will become a benchmark in setting the IPR context in Indian academia. It is hoped that the library and information professionals would accept this valuable publication whole heartedly.
